Oak Wilt Control Program Sponsored in Western Virginia

"The extensive oak forests on private lands in Western Virginia will be checked carefully by aerial scouts during the months of July and August," announced State Forester George W. Dean. The Division of Forestry observers will be on the lookout for discolored and wilting trees which exhibit typical symptoms of the oak wilt disease.

Oak wilt, caused by a fungus which blocks the water conducting vessels of infected trees, causes wilting and rapid defoliation and ultimate death of red and black oaks. Symptoms in white and chestnut oaks are less obvious and hence more difficult to detect.

Gingham is a favorite this summer for the little city miss. And not for suits, alone, but for any number of garments and for pillbox hats.

A combination of organdie and gingham gives a crisp, fresh effect. Black and white checks are always smart, but pink and white is a runner-up in sales.

Full skirts for summer are very comfortable and the short lengths in this season's designs call for pleats or gathers if the knees are to be covered. Some fullness starts with the waistline, but on others begins about half way down the length.

Organza replaces chiffon to a great extent for late summer. This material is not only cool, but looks cool. Combined with lace it is a favorite for weddings.
